population had some form of health coverage, be it private or government-sponsored, compared with 86 percent of the population in 2013.